

University founder held in teacher molestation

Kyodo News

The chancellor of Tokyo University of Social Welfare was arrested Monday on suspicion of molesting a female instructor at his office last year, police said.

Tsuneo Nakajima, 60, is suspected of forcibly kissing the 41-year-old woman and touching her breasts on the evening of Feb. 23 when he summoned her to his office to discuss her work performance, police said. She quit immediately after the incident.

Nakajima has denied the assault, but several other female teaching and administrative staff members also said he molested them, according to investigative sources.

A representative declined comment, saying the university is looking into the case.

Nakajima, who founded the university in 2000, specializes in education and runs a vocational school and a special nursing home.
