

Search Movies, People and Showtimes by ZIP Code

More in Movies »

In Theaters Coming Soon Critics' Picks On DVD Tickets & Showtimes Trailers ArtsBeat

MOVIE REVIEW

Behind Every Harassed Child? A Whole Lot of Clueless Adults

'Bully,' a Documentary by Lee Hirsch

NYT Critics' Pick

Weinstein Company

Alex is one of the subjects of the documentary "Bully," directed by Lee Hirsch.

By A. O. SCOTT

Published: March 29, 2012

"Bully," Lee Hirsch's moving and troubling documentary about the misery some children inflict upon others, arrives at a moment when bullying, long tolerated as a fact of life, is being redefined as a social problem. "Just kids being kids" can no longer be an acceptable response to the kind of sustained physical and emotional abuse that damages the lives of young people whose only sin is appearing weak or weird to their peers.

More About This Movie

Overview

New York Times Review

Cast, Credits & Awards

Readers' Reviews

Trailers & Clips

View Clip...

And while the film focuses on the specific struggles of five families in four states, it is also about — and part of — the emergence of a movement. It documents a shift in consciousness of the kind that occurs when isolated, oppressed individuals discover that they are not alone and begin the difficult work of altering intolerable conditions widely regarded as normal.

The feeling of aloneness is one of the most painful consequences of bullying. It is also, in some ways, a cause of it, since it is almost always socially isolated children (the new kid, the fat kid, the gay kid, the strange kid) who are singled out for mistreatment. For some reason — for any number of reasons that hover unspoken around the edges of Mr. Hirsch's inquiry — adults often fail to protect their

Log in to see what your friends are sharing on nytimes.com. Privacy Policy | What's This?

Log In With Facebook

What's Popular Now

The Benefits of Bilingualism

Why I Am Leaving Goldman Sachs

Tickets & Showtimes

Enter your ZIP code or city to view tickets and showtimes in your area.

City, State or ZIP Submit

More Theaters Near You »

RECOMMEND

TWITTER

LINKEDIN

E-MAIL

PRINT

REPRINTS

SHARE

Related

ARTSBEAT | VIDEO

A Talk With Lee Hirsch

By MEKADO MURPHY

Lee Hirsch, the director of "Bully," spoke about his film when it screened during the 2011 Tribeca Film Festival (and, at that time, was called "The Bully Project.") vulnerable charges.

Alex, a 14-year-old in Sioux City, Iowa, whose daily routine includes being teased, humiliated and assaulted (especially on the school bus), cannot bear to tell his parents what is going on. He even sticks up for his tormenters, who he says are "just messing around" when they stab him with pencils and call him vile names.

"If not for them, what friends do I have?" he asks his distraught, confused mother.

It's a heartbreaking moment. Equally sad — and also infuriating and painfully revealing — is a scene in which an assistant principal at Alex's middle school tries to settle a conflict between two boys who apparently had been fighting at recess. When she insists that they shake hands, one eagerly obliges, with a smile and an apology. The other sullenly resists, and as she scolds him for his noncooperation (letting his antagonist go), it becomes clear that this boy is the victim, and that the assistant principal's rushed attempt to be fair is in fact perpetuating a terrible and continuing injustice.

Later, after this same well-meaning, clueless educator has similarly mishandled a meeting with Alex's parents — showing them pictures of her grandchildren; chirpily insisting that the bus where Alex has been terrorized is "good as gold" — Alex's mother says "she politicianed us."

There is more "politicianing" on display in "Bully" than actual bullying, though Mr. Hirsch's camera does capture a few horrifying episodes (one of them so alarming that he shared it with parents and school officials). In spite of its title, the film is really about the victims, their parents and the powerful grown-ups who let them down.

A school superintendent in Georgia denies that bullying is a big problem in her district, in spite of the suicide of Tyler Long, a 17-year-old student who took his life after enduring years of harassment and ostracism. A sheriff in Yazoo County, Miss., tallies, with dry, bureaucratic relish, the 45 felony counts faced by Ja'Meya Jackson, a 14-year-old girl who pulled out a gun on a crowded school bus. Nothing can justify such a crime, he says.

That may be true, but his insistence on a narrow, legalistic understanding of Ja'Meya's case betrays a profound lack of concern about the sustained and systematic abuse that she experienced at the hands of her schoolmates.

It gets worse. In a small town in Oklahoma, Ty Smalley's suicide left behind loving parents and a devoted best friend, a self-described former bully whose insights are among the most accurate and devastating in the movie.

After Kelby Johnson, a high school student in another part of Oklahoma, came out as a lesbian, she and her family were shunned by neighbors and former friends, and Kelby was taunted by teachers as well as fellow students.

Mr. Hirsch weaves together these stories with compassion and tact, and he wisely refrains from making scapegoats of the bullies who cause Alex, Ja'Meya, Tyler, Ty and Kelby so much pain. "Bully" forces you to confront not the cruelty of specific children — who have their own problems, and their good sides as well — but rather the extent to which that cruelty is embedded in our schools and therefore in our society as a whole.

At times I found myself craving more analysis, a more explicit discussion of how the problem of bullying is connected to the broader issues of homophobia, education and violence in American life. But those issues are embedded in every story the film has to tell. Its primary intent is to stir feelings rather than to construct theories or make arguments, and its primary audience is not middle-aged intellectuals but middle-school students caught in the middle of the crisis it so powerfully illuminates.

But while we are on the subject of adult failures, it should be noted that the Motion Picture

Get the TimesLimited E-Mail

tonysilva@mac.com Sign Up Change E-mail Address | Privacy Policy

MOST E-MAILED

MOST VIEWED

- 1. ADRIENNE RICH, 1929-2012 A Poet of Unswerving Vision at the Forefront of Feminism
2. GAIL COLLINS More Guns, Fewer Hoodies
3. EARL SCRUGGS, 1924-2012 Earl Scruggs, Bluegrass Pioneer, Dies at 88
4. NICHOLAS D. KRISTOF From South Sudan to Yale

Association of America's ratings board, by insisting on an R rating for "Bully," has made it harder for young audiences to see. The Weinstein Company, which is distributing the film, has released it without a rating after the association denied its appeal and after a widely publicized petition drive was unable to change the board's mind.

There is a little swearing in the movie, and a lot of upsetting stuff, but while some of it may shock parents, very little of it is likely to surprise their school-age children. Whose sensitivity does the association suppose it is protecting? The answer is nobody's: That organization, like the panicked educators in the film itself, holds fast to its rigid, myopic policies to preserve its own authority. The members of the ratings board perform a useful function, but this is not the first time they've politicianed us.

Bully

Opens on Friday nationwide.

Directed by Lee Hirsch; written and produced by Mr. Hirsch and Cynthia Lowen; director of photography, Mr. Hirsch; edited by Lindsay Utz and Jenny Golden; music by Ion Furjanic and Justin Rice/Christian Rudder; released by the Weinstein Company. Running time: 1 hour 38 minutes. This film is not rated.

A version of this review appeared in print on March 30, 2012, on page C10 of the New York edition with the headline: Behind Every Harassed Child? A Whole Lot of Clueless Adults.

Get Free E-mail Alerts on These Topics

- Movies
- Bullies
- Documentary Films and Programs
- Weinstein Co

Ads by Google

what's this?

Clean your Mac

Award-winning Clean-up utility for Top Performance of your Mac!
MacKeeperapp.ZeoBIT.com

Average Reader Rating

4 rating, 27 votes

Rate It

5 Readers' Reviews

Review This Movie »

ALL COMMENTS READERS' RECOMMENDATIONS

Oldest | Newest

March 30th, 2012 4:04 am

Rating:

5. Spend a day in a school

John Dewey says it best and we are very far from this ideal, if you have spent any time in a school:

I believe that under existing conditions far too much of the stimulus and control proceeds from the teacher, because of neglect of the idea of the school as a form of social life. ...

I believe that we violate the child's nature and render difficult the best ethical results, by introducing the child too abruptly to a number of special studies, of reading, writing, geography, etc., out of relation to this social life.

I believe, therefore, that the true centre of correlation of the school subjects is not science, nor literature, nor history, nor geography, but the child's own social activities.

Ken Robinson says schools kill creativity. Innovation is one of the key pieces that marks American progress and future development. Go to any school for a day or so. Have a chat with the principal or dean. The ones I have worked with are like back to the 80s. The unionized work environments for the teachers

- 5. CITY ROOM
On 'Mad Men,' an Opening Scene Straight From Page 1
- 6. Some Like It Hotter
- 7. BASICS
The Mighty Mathematician You've Never Heard Of
- 8. Diagnoses of Autism on the Rise, Report Says
- 9. Weather Runs Hot and Cold, So Scientists Look to the Ice
- 10. BOOKS OF THE TIMES
How to Teach Art in 89 Simple Lessons

Go to Complete List »

Show My Recommendations

The WWE at the movies

ALSO IN MOVIES »

- 'God Save My Shoes'
- The right locks for the part

nytimes.com

MOVIES

GET A FREE NOOK SIMPLE TOUCH™

When you sign up for a one-year NOOK subscription to The Times. LEARN MORE ▶